TEMPERANCE COLUMN

Conducted by the W. C. T. U.

"Canteen" a Misnomer

If temperance, prohibition, and religious writers and speakers would drop the terms "army canteen" and "anti-canteen law," and substitute the word "barroom," it would help to enlighten some persons, and do away with much sentiment that now exists in favor of the "army canteen." Many persons do not understand that the soldiers may still have the canteen if desired, with the barroom eliminated. Others believe that the soldiers have been wrongfully deprived of a place of amusement or recreation that the canteen afforded, when the truth is they have only been deprived of a drinking or a barroom. If the soldiers have been deprived of anything else, it is because of some influence other than the Anti-canteen (barroom) law. Things should be called by their right names. When we speak of a place where beer is sold to be drunk on the premises say barroom, and not "canteen" which some persons still think means the tin flask in which a soldier carries water when he is on the march.

Lockport, N. Y.
[The term "canteen" is applied by army officers to that part of post exchange in which the sale of liquor was conducted. The post exchange itself was in no way affected by the passage of the Anti-canteen law except that the sale of liquor is prohibited therein.] Editor, New Voice.
